

Working with us

The bar is high here, and we picked you because we are confident you can clear it. Welcome to the team.

This is the companion to your engagement letter. It lays out exactly how we work together, the path from here, and every document you will see from us, so nothing about the process is a surprise.

Confidential Sent with your engagement letter July 2026

1. How we work

We are a high-performance team, and we are deliberate about how we operate. Three things shape working with us, and you will feel each of them from the start.

A high bar, and belief in you. We hold a high standard, and we are open about it. We also chose you on purpose. Those are the same message here, not opposites.

Candor, both directions. We say what we mean, we surface problems early, and we want the same from you. The first time we disagree is a good sign, not an awkward one.

Clear priorities. We will tell you the few things that matter most and where we want your help, in writing, and we will keep them in front of you. You will not have to guess.

2. The path from here

One clear sequence, with a single decision point at six months.

1. First contact. We sign a mutual NDA before sharing anything substantive, and send a short overview so you see who we are first.
2. Engagement. You receive this companion, your Advisor Engagement Letter, and a Compensation and Terms Schedule with every term filled in. The engagement letter includes the intellectual property terms, so one signature settles the engagement, your terms, and IP together. We settle the details with you before you sign.
3. Onboarding. In your first week or two we give you the context you need, a single point of contact, access, and an agreed cadence.
4. A check-in at 90 days. A short, two-way read against the priorities we set on day one.
5. A decision at six months. If you came in for a role and it has worked, we offer it. If you came in to advise, you continue as an advisor on the same terms.

Six months is a longer runway than a typical trial. That is on purpose. It gives the relationship real time to prove itself before either of us commits to more.

3. What you will receive and sign

Everything you will see from us, what each document is for, and when it arrives.

Before we start

Document	What it is for	When
Mutual NDA	Protects what we share with you and what you share with us. Fully two-sided.	First contact
What We Do one-pager	A short picture of what 4orm is and where it is going.	First contact

When you engage

Document	What it is for	When
Advisor Engagement Letter	Your scope, time, term, confidentiality, and how either of us can end it. It also includes the intellectual property terms, so work you create for us belongs to the company and anything you bring in and keep is listed inside the letter. One signature covers all of it.	At engagement
Compensation & Terms Schedule	Everything about your compensation in one place: your tokens and the share they represent, how distributions are worked out, any equity and its vesting, what happens if the company is sold, and notice periods. All agreed before you sign.	At engagement
Token instrument	The definitive document behind the tokens. Until it is finalized, your Schedule guarantees a defined equity or cash equivalent as a backstop.	At engagement

Your first weeks

Document	What it is for	When
Mission, vision & values	The mission, North Star, and the values we operate by, at a glance.	First weeks
Strategy & fundraising status	The plan, and where the current raise stands.	First weeks
Team, contacts & FAQ	Who is who, how to reach them, and an open place to ask anything.	First weeks
Advisor code of conduct	How we expect advisors to carry themselves, in and out of the room.	First weeks
Communication & tools	Where we work, how we talk, and where everything lives.	First weeks
Security & confidentiality	What you can access, what stays private, and your obligations.	First weeks

At six months

Document	What it is for	When
Six-month review	A short, two-way conversation against the priorities set on day one.	Six months
Offer or continuation	An offer letter if you are joining the team, with your tokens or equity converting on terms already in your Schedule, or a note confirming you continue as an advisor.	Six months

4. The six-month conversation

What happens at six months depends only on why you joined, and we decide it together.

If you came in for a role. The six months act as a real working run-in. If the fit and contribution are there, we extend an offer, and your advisory tokens or equity convert into your employee package on terms already written into your Schedule, so there is nothing to renegotiate. If it is not the right fit, we can part cleanly or continue as advisor.

If you came in to advise. We confirm the engagement continues on the same terms. No conversion, no role, unless you want one later.

5. Questions you may have

You are an experienced operator, so you are probably already asking some of these. Here are straight answers before you have to ask.

Ten legacy tokens out of how many?

The fully diluted denominator and the share your tokens represent are stated in your Compensation and Terms Schedule, in writing, before you sign. We do not leave that to a later conversation.

What are distributions actually paid on?

On a defined base set out in the Schedule, not on a number that can be managed down to nothing. The method is written down.

The token instrument does not exist yet. What am I relying on?

Until the definitive instrument is finalized, the Schedule carries a backstop that converts your allocation to a defined equity or cash equivalent. You are not signing a placeholder.

What if the company is sold during the first year?

Acceleration on a change of control is one of the terms we settle with you in the Schedule, in writing, up front.

Is the six-month gate a way to take my introductions and move on?

No. Your economics are pinned before you sign, and the recognition for anything you bring in survives independently of the engagement. The six-month decision is about the work, not a reset of your terms.

6. What we ask of you

To make this work, here is what we count on from you.

- Engage at the cadence we agree, and protect that time.
- Be candid early. If something is unclear, off track, or you do not know, say so.
- Move the priorities we set together, and tell us when they should change.
- Hold the confidence we place in you, and treat what you learn here as confidential.

In return: clarity, straight feedback, a real stake in what we are building, and a team that is glad you are here.
